

Swallow Migration story.

You mostly see us in garages and farm yards we like staying close to water so we don't need to fly far for a wash or a swim or a drink. When it gets cold we fly to South Africa.

We start our journey from the English Channel, when we fly across we might see dolphins, in the large glimmering waves also we might just see fish so we can swoop down and grab it from the large silver glimmering sea and eventually we reach France.

It is very hard to understand them and in the distance we see the large Eiffel Tower, it is made out of real gold and real silver.

We have travelled 200 miles a days and we are feeling really tired thirsty, and hungry however we still have the task of flying over the Pyrenees mountain when we were flying over the Pyrenees mountains it is extremely cold it is also very foggy, cloudy and very dangerous.

They are big and scary because it is very narrow flying through them because I think I am going to bash into them and hurt my wing also it is sunny and a bit hot next we arrive at Spain.

As we travel into Spain I feel the heat hit me so we swoop down to cool off in the sea.

I enjoy watching the boys play football on the beach. Then we head off towards the Sahara desert. When we fly over the Sahara desert, we see loads of sand and camels and I am feeling dehydrated.

Now I feel destroyed from the heat. Then we head to South Africa.

In South Africa there are lots of animals including leopards, cheetahs, lions, tigers, Zebras, giraffes and birds. Last year I nested next by the water hole in a tall farmyard building.
